

THE 10TH ANNUAL TUANZ EDUCATION CONFERENCE 2005

COMING TO A VENUE NEAR YOU SOON!

 This year we present two outstanding keynote speakers:

DR JASON OHLER (author of 'Then What?')
President's Professor of Educational Technology, University of Alaska

"The goal is the effective, creative and wise use of technology...to not only know how to use technology, but when and why. To bring together technology, community and learning in ways that work. And while we are at it, to have fun.

"In an age of 'No Child Left Behind,' what is technology's role? Should we go digital? Or go ditch it all?

"After gobs of glitzy digital gear, endless excruciating software upgrades, computers that teach us math and robots that clean house, Then What?

"Listen to the story of William Tell, hero of my novel about living and learning in the Digital Age. Then What? is a fun, serious, rollercoaster of a story about a computer savant who tries to find a path with a heart in a plastic and silicon world gone crazy with innovation. It is the story of personal transformation as William goes from geeker, to seeker, to teacher, to innovative designer of new schools for new times.

"It is a story about how we absolutely must re-think our schools if we are going to prepare our kids for the lives they will live, rather than the lives we are used to. I look forward to bringing this story alive in New Zealand."

DAVID COPELAND Director and Educational Innovator of CWA New Media

"I see new media not as a stainless steel, hard-edged, gee-whiz bunch of technologies, but rather as tools to enable us all to do what we do best as people – to share, communicate, and participate."

In this presentation David explores "the very nearly final frontier... New Zealanders boldly going where no one has ever gone before" and he finds an elearning landscape populated by a growing number of kiwi learners.
